"Woodside" is the residence of Captain William S. Betts. An hour and a quarter's drive from South Boston will bring the visitor to the quiet country home, embowered in the shade of a large forest of original growth. It is about one and a half miles from Black Walnut, a village which has long been noted for the hospitality and refinement of its people. Years ago the community was one of greet wealth and its people lived in elegance upon their large and lertile estates, surrounded by all the comforts life could desire. Since the war the inexorable hand of adversity has touched the place, and the large families that once made the country for miles around the home of splendid and lavish hospitality have been broken and scattered, and many of the old homesteads now anord but faint memories of the rural magnificence that once characterized them.

I am led into this glance into the past by the happy occasion at "Woodside" last Friday the 24th instant, which brought back most vividity and pleasantly those good old days that have gone forever.

The occasion I refer to was the celebration by Captain and Mrs. Betts of the filtieth anniversary of their marriage. The day was a perfect one, and nature seemed ndence of the Richmond Dispatch.

Seven sons and seven daughters grew up around the devoted comple—the daughters noted throughout this section for their remarkable beauty and their womanly tenderness and grace and worth; the sons equally well-known, handson, and popular men. These four-teen children are all alive with the exception of one, George Betts, who was killed at Kelly's Ford in the late war. The remain-Refly's Ford in the late war. there, and the younger generation was very ably represented by twenty-eight grand-children, making a total of forty-five persens. The absent of the family were two sons-in-law and tweive or fifteen grand-chi'dren. "Woodside" has been the scene of many gay assemblies, and the laughter and smiles and bright eyes of many years still seem to linger round its familiar paths, but never has the past known a brighter gathering than last Fri-day, which made the forest echo with laughter and song. This activity is doubtless owing to the close of the trucking season, which usually puts a large amount of money in circulation, and the dull season with shopkeepers will be later. Another robbery, very similar to the one perpetrated recently at the residence of Senator Mahone, was committed this morning before daylight. This time it was the residence of Dr. D. W. Lassiter, on Tabb street, that was entered. The thief tried the windows over the front porch, but failed. Entrance was effected through one of the rear doors. Dr. Lassiter's clothing, in bis chamber, was searched, and the money taken from the pockets. Fortunately he deposited his money in bank yesterday and had only a few dollars in his pockets. His son's clothing, in another room, was also searched. In the Doctor's office his instruments were scattered about rather freely, but none of them carried off, and nothing but the money was taken.

Rather a singular case was brought to light by the police carly this morning. A white man in a stopor—apparently from the effects of a severe blow on the forehead—was found near the Old market. When he had sufficiently revived to talk be gave his name as G. W. Potts, but refused to give any information as to the manner in which the ugly wound on his head was received.
